Some translations vary in wording, with some saying "brass" and others "bronze." The verses from Revelation derive from the vision of John of Patmos. They generally are meant to describe Jesus as John sees him in his heavenly form, as opposed to being a description of Jesus in his earthly form.

The Artemision Bronze is an ancient Greek sculpture that was recovered from the sea off Cape Artemision, in northern Euboea, Greece. According to most scholars, the bronze represents Zeus, the thunder-god and king of gods, though it has also been suggested it might represent Poseidon. The statue is slightly over lifesize at 209 cm, and would have held either a thunderbolt, if Zeus, or a trident if Poseidon. The empty eye-sockets were originally inset, probably with bone, as well as the eyebrows,

The Eyes of God is by far one of my favorite fantasy books because it does something that most fantasy books fail to do. It focuses on romance and love as the main reason for journey. Now of course a lot of books do this but in the genre of Epic Fantasy romance is usually a minute force that has a certain role for a certain amount of time.

The Bronze Knight Series by John Marco - Goodreads

The Eyes of God is largely about The Bronze Knight, Lukien. He's a character who has seemingly everything, looks, swagger, military prowess. He even wins all the tourneys with hardly a second thought. He's also a very flawed character that you root for nonetheless. Because he's good at fighting, he loves war.
